- rifle section (8 personnel + BMP-1 IFV)
- rifle section (9 personnel + BTR-60 APC)
- support section (7 personnel, non-combat specialties but deployed for base defense)
- noncombatant dependents (~12 personnel)

Post-battle status:

- 5 KIA
- 1 severe/critical WIA (cerebral hemorrhage)
- 1 minor/moderate WIA
- BTR-60 disabled (engine damage, recoverable)

Post-Battle of Radom SITREP

Enemy Forces Status

C Company, 126th Reconnaissance Battalion, 6th Guards Motor Rifle Division

Unit was posted to Radom as quick reaction force (QTF) for convoys transiting main supply route (MSR) between Lublin and Lodz.

Pre-battle composition:

- command element (3 personnel)
- 4x rifle squad (6 personnel each + platoon leader + BTR-80, OT-64)
- reconnaissance vehicle platoon (10 personnel + FV101 Scorpion, UAZ-469, HMMWV)
- support element (8 personnel)

Post-battle status:

- No longer combat-effective.
- 17 KIA, 5 WIA. All 35 survivors believed to be captured.
- All combat and support vehicles destroyed or captured.

Detachment 55, 96th Independent Reconnaissance Battalion, Soviet Reserve Front HQ

Unit was posted to Radom to advise and direct Radom ZOMO in regional security and counterinsurgency.

Pre-battle composition:

- 9 personnel embedded with ZOMO forces to advise and manage communications net: HQ (2), mortar battery (3), maneuver forces (1 each, cavalry and mechanized infantry companies), base (2)
- 6-person team deployed independently as antitank task force

Post-battle status:

- No longer mission-capable.
- 8 KIA, 3 WIA and captured.
- Maneuver advisors and base advisors not accounted for.

Post-Battle of Radom SITREP

Radom Motorized Reserves of the Citizens' Militia (ZOMO)

Pre-battle composition:

- headquarters company (~30 personnel; includes mortar platoon w/ 3x 82mm mortars, 2x scout-sniper team, antitank team w/ BTR-50P/SPG-9)
- mechanized infantry company (~25 personnel w/ 1x OT-64, 2x BTR-60)
- cavalry company (~20 personnel w/ mounts, pack horses, incomplete remount herd)
- 2x infantry company (~30 personnel each)
- service and support company (~30 personnel, non-combat specialties)

Post-battle status:

- HQ company destroyed: 11 KIA, 16 captured (several WIA), BTR-50P/SPG-9 disabled.
- Mechanized infantry company withdrew; 9 confirmed KIA, 1 BTR-60 destroyed (catastrophic kill), 1 BTR-60 damaged.
- Cavalry company withdrew; 2 confirmed KIA.
- Infantry companies and service and support company not committed to battle; presumed still present within Radom (with exception of service and support personnel present when mortar platoon was overrun).
- Field reports indicate poor to no coordination between maneuver elements during withdrawal. Destruction of headquarters company has likely disrupted unit cohesion.

B Company, 101st Guards Pioneer Battalion, 6th Guards Motor Rifle Division

Not present during battle. Presence in Radom was unknown until brief contact during movement through the city. Interrogation of captured personnel from Detachment 55 indicates that this is a detail of 28 combat engineers and 10 unskilled laborers assigned to prepare a permanent base for a company-sized (expandable to battalion-sized) Soviet presence in Radom. Selected site is former workers' dormitories adjacent to the destroyed Fabryka Broni Radom arms factory. Preparation work is ~50% complete, with target completion date of 15 October.

This unit has been coordinating with both C-126th Reconnaissance and Detachment 55. Several surviving personnel of C-126th Reconnaissance, including the company commander, claim personal friendships with B-101st Pioneer personnel.

Radom Prison Camp

Not involved in battle. Guard force is 16 personnel, mixed Soviet conscripts and Polish ex-ZOMO under overall Soviet command. Other Soviet units in Radom have little to no contact with this group and consider it dangerously corrupt, degenerate, and uncivilized.

Post-Battle of Radom SITREP
